AppROVENTIFICATION Release 2005/04/28 CIA-RDP7	<sup>79100975A029490010094-1</sup>	33
O: NAME AND ADDRESS DATE INITIALS
2	(Security Classification)
3		25
	CONTROL NO.
ACTION DIRECT REPLY PREPARE REPLY
APPROVAL DISPATCH RECOMMENDATION COMMENT FILE RETURN
CONCURRENCE INFORMATION SIGNATURE MARKS:
·
FROM: NAME, ADDRESS, AND PHONE NO.   DATE
TROM: NAME, ADDRESS, AND FRIORE NO.
THE RESIDENCE OF A SECOND CONTRACT OF THE PROPERTY OF THE PROP
vy i Odarek (Silven) A (Missan Agentidat) i militar sy quamosia Ne 0.574
	25X1
• •
Mathematical Assistance Annage on Property Control Annage of Property Control
Saturday October 2, 1976	C1 NIDC 76-232C
	· ·
	·
	20	- V 4
	25	5X1
MATIONAL COUDITY INCO	PMATION
NATIONAL SECURITY INFOR
Unauthorized Disclosure Subject to Crin	minai Sanctions
ate Department review completed
ate Department review completed
	Top Secret	٠
	Water process and the second s	. 2
Approved For Release 2005/04/28 : CIA-RDP7	(Conveity Classification)

Approved For Release 2005/04/28 : CIA-RDP79T00975 029400010004-1

25X1 25X1 National Intelligence Daily Cable for Saturday, October 2, 1976.

The NID Cable is for the purpose of informing senior US officials.

CONTENTS

USSR - MIDDLE EAST: Soviet Proposal Page 1 LEBANON: Situation Report Page 3 Page 5 CHINA: National Day Observances Page 6 WEST GERMANY: Pre-election Wrap-up USSR - WEST GERMANY: Support for Ruling Coalition Page 7 ANGOLA: Military Operations Page 11 Page 12 USSR-UGANDA: New Arms Agreement Page 12 FRANCE: Economic Program EC: Fisheries Policy Page 14 Page 16 ITALY: Industrial Reorganization Page 17 ITALY: Measures to Save Lira

25X1

25X1

ECUADOR: Gulf Confiscation Averted Page 18

Approved For Release 2005/04/28 : CIA-RDP79T00975A029400010004-1

25X1	The Soviets may also have felt on the defensive as a result of the unexpected progress made by Secretary Kissinger's diplomatic shuttle in southern Africa.
25X1	The USSR's Geneva exercise has been a sterile one in the past, and there is no reason to believe the Soviets have any genuine hope that it will be more successful this time.	, a ,
25X1	Any Soviet initiative on Lebanon would also have trouble getting off the ground, judging from Syrian President Asad's recent public statements. Asad, who has never before spoken so openly of his differences with the USSR, went out of his way to be critical of the Soviets and any further Soviet efforts to bring about a Syrian withdrawal from Lebanon.
25X1	Asad acknowledged that General Secretary Brezhnev had asked for a Syrian withdrawal in July, but dismissed the request as nothing more than an "expression of a point of view." He implied that the Soviets were ignorant of the real factors in Lebanon, and indicated that Syrian forces would remain there until their job was done.
25X1	Moscow's current proposals follow a flurry of diplomatic activity that began three weeks ago: An authoritative Observer article that appeared in Pravda on September 8 announced a more even-handed policy toward Syrians and Palestinians.
	The Soviets consulted in mid-September with Palestine Liberation Organization leaders Arafat in Beirut and Qaddumi in Moscow, with Arafat reportedly receiving two messages from the Soviet leadership.	- - -
25X1	Additionally, Geneva Conference representative Vinogradov visited Syria two weeks ago to get Damascus' support for the Soviet initiative. There also were diplomatic contacts with other Arab states, including Egypt and Iraq.	25X1
25X1

nouncement to the town's inhabitants that they were on their way to liberate it from the "occupation of foreigners."  25X1  The Christians are moving on Alayh from the north and presumably intend to press the attack from the south as well after taking over a key road junction. The Christians are reported to have taken positions on the outskirts of Alayh but have apparently not yet entered the town.  25X1  //Syrian forces have thus far limited their support for the Alayh operation to artillery attacks on the town from Bhamdun.// The Syrians encircled Bhamdun, the second leftist stronghold on the highway, early yesterday after moving south from their operations in the mountains earlier this week. They are shelling the town but have not yet attempted to take it.  25X1  Although the Christians and Syrians seem determined to open the Beirut-Damascus highway by taking Alayh and Bhamdun operations against both towns will presumably be more difficultion than the two-day mountain offensive. Both are relatively large urban centers similar to Sidon, where Syrian forces suffered costly losses earlier this year before they abandoned their attempt to take the town.  25X1  The mountain towns seized this week had, moreover, been largely abandoned by their inhabitants, whereas Alayh and Bhamdun are still inhabited.  25X1  Most of the Palestinian forces driven from the mountains earlier this week have also moved into Alayh and are ap-		LEBANON: Situation Report presumably intend to press the attack from the south as well after taking over a key road junction. The Christians are reported to have taken positions on the outskirts of Alayh but have apparently not yet entered the town.  25X1  //Syrian forces have thus far limited their support for the Alayh operation to artillery attacks on the town from Bhamdun.// The Syrians encircled Bhamdun, the second leftist stronghold on the highway, early yesterday after moving south from their operations in the mountains earlier this week. They are shelling the town but have not yet attempted to take it.  25X1  Although the Christians and Syrians seem determined to open the Beirut-Damascus highway by taking Alayh and Bhamdum operations against both towns will presumably be more difficult than the two-day mountain offensive. Both are relatively large urban centers similar to Sidon, where Syrian forces suffered costly losses earlier this year before they abandoned their attempt to take the town.  25X1  The mountain towns seized this week had, moreover, been largely abandoned by their inhabitants, whereas Alayh and Bhamdun are still inhabited.  25X1  Most of the Palestinian forces driven from the mountains earlier this week have also moved into Alayh and are apparently bent on putting up a stiff resistance to Christian and Syrian advances.	25X1 ,	two remaining Palestinian-leftist strongholds on the Beirut- Damascus highway, early yesterday morning with a triumphant an- nouncement to the town's inhabitants that they were on their support for the Alayh operation to artillery attacks on the town from Bhamdun.// The Syrians encircled Bhamdun, the second leftist stronghold on the highway, early yesterday after moving south from their operations in the mountains earlier this week. They are shelling the town but have not yet attempted to take it.  25X1  Although the Christians and Syrians seem determined to open the Beirut-Damascus highway by taking Alayh and Bhamdun operations against both towns will presumably be more difficult than the two-day mountain offensive. Both are relatively large urban centers similar to Sidon, where Syrian forces suffered costly losses earlier this year before they abandoned their attempt to take the town.  25X1  The mountain towns seized this week had, moreover, been largely abandoned by their inhabitants, whereas Alayh and Bhamdun are still inhabited.  25X1  Most of the Palestinian forces driven from the mountains earlier this week have also moved into Alayh and are apparently bent on putting up a stiff resistance to Christian and Syrian advances.	25X1	after taking over a key road junction. The Christians are re- ported to have taken positions on the outskirts of Alayh but to open the Beirut-Damascus highway by taking Alayh and Bhamdur operations against both towns will presumably be more difficult than the two-day mountain offensive. Both are relatively large urban centers similar to Sidon, where Syrian forces suffered costly losses earlier this year before they abandoned their attempt to take the town.  25X1  The mountain towns seized this week had, moreover, been largely abandoned by their inhabitants, whereas Alayh and Bhamdun are still inhabited.  Most of the Palestinian forces driven from the mountains earlier this week have also moved into Alayh and are apparently bent on putting up a stiff resistance to Christian and Syrian advances.	25X1	support for the Alayh operation to artillery attacks on the town from Bhamdun.// The Syrians encircled Bhamdun, the second leftist stronghold on the highway, early yesterday after moving south from their operations in the mountains earlier this week. They are shelling the town but have not yet attempted to take been largely abandoned by their inhabitants, whereas Alayh and Bhamdun are still inhabited.  25X1  Most of the Palestinian forces driven from the mountains earlier this week have also moved into Alayh and are apparently bent on putting up a stiff resistance to Christian and Syrian advances.	25X1	to open the Beirut-Damascus highway by taking Alayh and Bhamdun, operations against both towns will presumably be more difficult than the two-day mountain offensive. Both are relatively large urban centers similar to Sidon, where Syrian forces suffered costly losses earlier this year before they abandoned their attains earlier this week have also moved into Alayh and are apparently bent on putting up a stiff resistance to Christian and Syrian advances.	25X1	been largely abandoned by their inhabitants, whereas Alayh and
25X1 ,	25X1	tains earlier this week have also moved into Alayh and are apparently bent on putting up a stiff resistance to Christian and
	25X1 ,

3

Approved For Release 2005/04/28 : CIA-RDP79T00975A029400010004-1

There are growing indications of frayed relations between Palestinian and leftist forces over the leftists' conduct during the Syrian offensive this week.  The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate president Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts that he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He	There are growing indications of frayed relations between Palestinian and leftist forces over the leftists' conduct during the Syrian offensive this week.  The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis himself has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the head nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand agains the Syrian presence in Lebanen, and his association with the	DATTO 2 CCTUD 1	The Palestine Liber for a cease-fire late	e on Thursday and	vowed to
The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts that he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis himself has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the head nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese armyare at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	fight on to "de	efend its existence.'	Ŧ
The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts that he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis himself has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese armyare at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the
The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts that he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis himself has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese armyare at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the
The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts that he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis himself has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the head nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the
The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts than he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis himself has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the head nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the				7 7
The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts that he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis his self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the head nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the		There are growing	indications of ir	ayed rela- ha laftists'
The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts that he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	The resentment may have been deepened by the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis himself has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese armyare at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	conduct during	the Syrian offensive	e this week.	IIC ICICISCS
behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indications that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts than he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis himself has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the head nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	conduct during	the byrrain orrenout.	  behavior of left ist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts than he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis himself has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the head nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"——a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indications that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts than he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis himself has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the head nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the
behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indications that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts that he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	behavior of leftist leader Kamal Jumblatt. There are indication that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis himself has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the head nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the		The resentment may	have been deepen	ed by the
that Jumblatt insisted before the Syrian attack began that Palestinian and leftist forces stand and fight; Jumblatt then left the country for a tour of several Arab capitals  Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts tha he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis himself has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	behavior of le:	ftist leader Kamal J	umblatt. There ar	e indications
Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts that he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis himself has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	that Jumblatt	insisted before the S	Syrian attack beg	an that Pal-
Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associate President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts that he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	Syria seems to have begun a major effort to associated President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis himself has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts that he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	estinian and le	eftist forces stand a	and fight; Jumbla	tt then left
President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts tha he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	the country for	r a tour of several A	Arab capitals
President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts that he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the
President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts that he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	President Sarkis with the Syrian offensive, although Sarkis him self has been at pains to make it clear in private contacts the he had nothing to do with it.  Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the
Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	Syria	a seems to have begun	n a major effort	to associate
Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	President Sark	is with the Syrian of	rrensive, arthoug clear in private	contacts tha
Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	Damascus radio yesterday broadcast a press conference given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the			orcar in biliace	00:104000 0:10
given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	given in Aynturah by a commander of the "Vanguards of the Lebanese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the			• nese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese armyare at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	nese Army" claiming that his forces had taken the town on the explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	Dama	scus radio yesterday	broadcast a pres	s conference explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese armyare at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	explicit orders of Sarkis. In fact, Syrian forces captured Aynturah, and the "Vanguards"—a Syrian—sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	given in Ayntu	rah by a commander o	t the "Vanguards	or the Lebaturah, and the "Vanguards"a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese armyare at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	turah, and the "Vanguards"a Syrian-sponsored group of Christian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese armyare at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	nese Army cra.	s of Sarkis. In fact	. Svrian forces o	aptured Ayn-
tian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese army—are at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	tian and Shia Muslim troops gathered from the former Lebanese armyare at this point little more than a front for Syrian troops.  The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	turah, and the	"Vanguards"a Syri	an-sponsored grou	p of Chris-
The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	tian and Shia	Muslim troops gather	ed from the forme	r Lebanese
The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	The direct linkage of Sarkis with the mountain offensive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	-	his point little mor	e than a front fo	or Syrian
sive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	sive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	troops.
sive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	sive will be a serious embarrassment for the new President. He is already under pressure from leftists to take a stand against the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the		direct linkage of Sa	rkis with the mou	ntain offen-
the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the	The			esident He offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	the Syrian presence in Lebanon, and his association with the offensive will serve to reinforce the Palestinians' suspicion	sive will be a	serious embarrassme	nt for the new Pi	esidenc. ne that he is at hest a powerless tool of Syria.	Offensive will serve to reinforce the ratestinians suspicion	sive will be a is already und	serious embarrassme er pressure from lef	tists to take a s	tand against that ho is at hest a noverless tool of Suria	sive will be a is already und the Syrian pre	serious embarrassme er pressure from lef sence in Lebanon, an	tists to take a s d his association	tand against with the

4

	CHINA: National Day Observances
25X1	Chinese leaders did not hold the festive activities usually associated with the celebration of National Day, such as banquets and parties in the parks, but the Peking-based members of the Politburo did appear Thursday night at a meeting attended by 400 representatives of the "masses."
25X1	The leaders were listed in their normal protocol or- der, projecting an image of unity and continuity. The meeting itself was billed as a symbol of the unity between the leader- ship and the people.
25X1	A brief account of a speech by de facto party head Hua Kuo-feng contained no references to the current campaign of criticism against rightists. Politburo members based in the provinces attended similar meetings at home, indicating that the meeting of the full Politburo that apparently began after Mao's death is now over.
25X1 [	In contrast to the usual procedure for National Day, Peking's three major publications did not issue a joint editorial. Instead, People's Daily published a bland editorial of its own that called for studying Mao's works and made only passing reference to the need for "struggle" against the "bourgeoisie" in the party.
25X1	The other two major publications that normally collaborate in joint editorials did not lend their weight to the People's Daily editorial. This could indicate some dissatisfaction that it did not push the antirightist theme hard enough.
25X1	The editorial in fact was much milder in tone than some recent articles in People's Daily and Red Flag . These articles have suggested efforts by the party's left wing to breathe new life into the antirightist campaign. The articles have called for opposing capitalist roaders "no matter who they are" and for sweeping out "bourgeois trash from every corner."
25X1	In another possible sign of dissension among the leadership, an article in Red Flag resurrected a quotation from the now-disgraced former defense minister Lin Piao extolling Mao's thought. This prominent use of a well-known Lin statement is the latest of a number of signs that Lin and the "coup"

25X1

25X1

25X1

25X1

25X1

25X1

that state.

with which he was associated may remain a contentious issue, and suggests that there is continued unhappiness over the loss of prestige suffered by the army since Lin's fall. WEST GERMANY: Pre-election Wrap-up Tomorrow's parliamentary election in West Germany remains a toss-up. Public opinion polls conducted during the past two weeks suggest that the governing parties have a slight lead, but the pollsters acknowledge a 2-percent margin for error. The 10 to 12 percent of the voters who were still undecided will have a critical impact. Final results will not be known until at least several hours after the polls close at 1300 EDT on Sunday. Several weeks of hectic campaigning, marred toward the end by mudslinging, reached a climax on September 30 with a four-hour televised debate among the chief political leaders. Social Democratic Chancellor Schmidt, Christian Democratic leader Kohl, and the two presumptive vice chancellors-Foreign Minister Genscher, leader of the Free Democrats, and Franz-Josef Strauss, leader of the Bavarian Christian Social Union--addressed their remarks during the debate primarily to the uncommitted voters. Schmidt attempted to score political points by announcing that unemployment in West Germany declined during September and is now below 900,000 and the 4-percent mark. Kohl was at his best when attacking the government on its Ostpolitik. The Christian Social Union is likely to score heavily in Bavaria, and the Christian Democrats will do well in the other southern states in West Germany. The Christian Democrats will also probably make gains in Hesse, where Social Democratic leaders are involved in scandals, and possibly in the Hamburg area. The key state--as in the past--will be North - Rhine

Westphalia. Nearly 30 percent of the voters live there, and over one third of the parliamentary deputies are elected from

25X1	The Christian Democrats had been doing well there recently, largely because of the aggressive tactics of the party's secretary general, but even some Christian Democrats admit that his charges of "cronyism" among trade union leaders and the Social Democrats may backfire.
) )	USSR - West Germany: Support for Ruling Coalition
25X1	As the West German election campaign enters its final days, the USSR has gone out of its way to demonstrate that it favors a victory for the ruling Social Democrat - Free Democrat coalition.
25X1	The most dramatic Soviet gesture in support of Chancellor Schmidt's government was the announcement last week that Soviet party chief Brezhnev will visit Bonn, probably late this year. An invitation to Brezhnev was extended and accepted in October 1974 during Schmidt's visit to Moscow, but Soviet - West German relations have fluctuated since then and the visit had been repeatedly postponed.
25X1	The Soviet attitude toward the coalition has been ambivalent over the last year, reflecting concern that Bonn was retreating from the Ostpolitik of former chancellor Brandt.
25X1	The Soviets, for example, have been critical of Minister of Defense Leber, a conservative Social Democrat, who has advocated building up the West German military in the face of growing Soviet strength and has disparaged Soviet proposals at the Vienna force reduction talks.
25X1	The Soviets were also disturbed by the increasingly critical attitude of Foreign Minister Genscher, the leader of the Free Democrats, who has insisted that legal, cultural, and scientific-technological agreements under negotiation between the two countries would apply to West Berlin as well.
25X1	Moscow's decision to help the coalition in the election may have stemmed in part from the increasing attacks during the summer by the Christian parties on the Schmidt government for its weakness in negotiating with the Soviets. The opposition's accusations coincided with a number of incidents on the

25X1

25X1

25X1

25X1

border between the two Germanies and with East German interference with busloads of young Christian Democrats en route to West Berlin to demonstrate against the Berlin Wall.

After meetings in West Berlin at which Christian Democratic and Christian Social Union officials challenged the Soviet view of West Berlin's ties with West Germany, the Soviets issued a series of attacks on the two parties, singling out leaders such as Franz-Josef Strauss, whom they called a relentless advocate of an anti-Soviet, cold war line.

At the same time, the USSR stopped criticizing Genscher. Soviet Ambassador Falin held a highly publicized meeting with Genscher in late August. Both sides conveyed the impression that new developments in bilateral relations would be discussed when the West German and Soviet foreign ministers met in New York during the UN General Assembly session.

Earlier, the Soviets had taken other steps designed to be helpful to the ruling coalition, as well as to demonstrate to the West German voter the practical benefits of good relations with the USSR. Moscow stepped up the number of approvals for exit visas for ethnic German Soviet citizens, promoted trade fairs in West Germany and West Berlin, and ignored minor incidents on the transit routes to Berlin.

If, contrary to Soviet hopes, the opposition parties win the election, the initial Soviet reaction will be to back off until cabinet posts are filled and a government program emerges. Although Christian Social Union leader Strauss, a likely candidate for minister of finance, is particularly disliked in Moscow, the Soviets would probably suspend their anti-Strauss propaganda while they see how he behaves in office.

Similarly, should an incident involving West Berlin or East Germany occur, the Soviets would react cautiously, with a sharp eye on the new government's response. Soviet-German relations in the past have reflected the USSR's willingness to deal with whoever is in power. Moscow is unlikely to deviate from this principle after the election returns are in.

25X1

Next 1 Page(s) In Document Exempt

25X1

25X1

25X1

ANGOLA: Mi	litary Operations
Cubans and	The Neto government is carrying out military operant national Union insurgents in southern Angola ran border. Government forces are being supported by apparently also by some guerrillas of the South Pople's Organization.	near and Pereir lier this pointsCa rican Cune	The operations have sparked serious unrest among to on the Angolan side of the border between Calueque de Eca. The South African government confirmed exeek that construction has been suspended at two klueque and Ruacanaof the joint Angolan - South Angolan by South Angolan by South Angolan government.	ie ear- ey if-
Airican me widespread ries, refu	The Angolans have disputed news stories in the Sou dia indicating that the operations have resulted i killing of innocent persons. According to the sto gees reaching Namibia this week claimed that 500 p een killed since the operations began last weekend	.n - .er-
tne scene The Neto r	The Angolan-Namibian border area is likely to beco of increasing military activity in the months ahea egime is anxious to extend its authority to the bo ith Cuban help, has established a number of garris a.	d.
over the to	SWAPO would like to step up its incursions into Nangola, especially now that South Africa's control erritory is attracting international attention. Un SWAPO conducted its limited guerrilla operations

25X1 The South Africans, who have been concerned over the border area for some time, apparently believe the present operations in Angola are designed to provide support for future 25X1 SWAPO incursions into Namibia. 25X1 South African forces have apparently been carrying on limited operations of their own in southern Angola with the assistance of anti-Neto Angolans. Neto's forces captured a South African soldier and three Angolans in southeastern Angola in late August. USSR-UGANDA: New Arms Agreement The USSR has evidently signed a new arms agreement 25X1 with Uganda. The accord may provide for the replacement of the MIG-21 fighters destroyed during the Israeli commando raid on Entebbe Airport in early July. 25X1 According to Western and Ugandan press sources, a Soviet delegation signed an arms agreement in Kampala on September 28. No details are available, but Ugandan President Amin hailed the agreement as "effective and timely." Amin has been attempting to obtain replacement air-25X1 craft from the USSR, which provided Uganda's first MIG-21 fighters in 1975. After the Entebbe episode, Amin and the Soviet charge in Kampala reportedly held discussions on re-equipping the Ugandan armed forces. FRANCE: Economic Program President Giscard is attempting--without much suc-25X1 cess--to rally popular support for the French government's economic stabilization program.

25X1

Before he can return to parliament, Chirac faces a by-election in his own district on November 7. His present initiative helps keep his name in the headlines.
Chirac's move undercuts Giscard's efforts to attract a broad-based majority. A mid-September poll showed that Giscard's popularity had slipped several points since July. In addition, although 58 percent of the French view Barre in a favorable light, an equal number think his chances of reducing inflation are poor.
initiation are poor.
EC: Fisheries Policy
//An EC Commission paper that proposes a new fisheries policy for the Community may prove to be the most contentious issue facing the Community over the next several months. It has already drawn strongly adverse reactions from the UK and Ireland, which believe it does not provide sufficient protection for their fishing industries.//
//The paper rejects British and Irish demands for an exclusive offshore fishing zone of up to 50 miles (80 kilometers). It suggests instead a 12-mile (19-kilometer) zone for each coastal state, with quotas for fish caught in the remaining EC waters to be divided among the Nine and specified third countries.//
//The Commission would grant higher quotas to coastal states, taking into consideration such matters as traditional fishing practices, regional impact, and losses resulting from a state's exclusion from non-EC waterssuch as off the coast of Iceland. It would also offer the UK and Ireland financial aid to restructure their fishing industries.//
//Present EC policy provides for 6- to 12-mile (9.6- to 19-kilometer) variable national zones until 1982, at which time all EC fishermen will be given equal access to Community waters. The UK and Ireland are not happy with the present policy, maintaining that a wider zone is essential for the survival of their fishing industries. They insist that the policy was adopted "in indecent haste" just before negotiations on the enlargement of the Community began.//

25X1	//The original six EC members, led by France, contend that there is no legal basis to extend the zone beyond 12
: : :	miles (19 kilometers) and that the UK and Ireland passed up their chance to negotiate this issue in 1973 when they signed the Treaty of Accession to the EC.//
25X1	//Demonding to a Building Townia William College
DEV4	//According to a British Foreign Ministry official, the UK is now considering whether it can use its leverage in other areassuch as the common agricultural policyto get its way on fisheries. The Six, supported by Denmark, are determined to resist such pressures, and the issue is expected to provoke a contentious debate when the EC foreign ministers discuss the Commission's plan at their meeting in Brussels on October 18 and 19.//
25X1	//Irish officials, themselves surprised by the nationalistic response the Commission proposal has evoked in Ireland, say it is unacceptable and plan to take a hard line at the foreign ministers' Council. Ireland catches most of its fish within 50 miles (80 kilometers) of its shore and views the proposed quota system as a serious threat to its nascent fishing industry.//
25X1	//The Irish navy commandeered and impounded a
!	large Soviet trawler and a Bulgarian factory ship this week. The Irish actions are intended to convince other foreign fishermen of Dublin's determination to enforce its jurisdiction and underscore the importance it attaches to the issue.//
25X1	//The UK and Ireland have pushed hardest among the Nine for establishment of a 200-mile (322-kilometer) Community zone, citing growing competition in Community waters from non-EC countriesparticularly the Soviet Union and some East European states. Iceland, Norway, Canada, and the US have declared 200-mile (322-kilometer) exclusive fishing zones or will do so soon. Britain has threatened to declare a national 200-mile (322-kilometer) zone unilaterally on the first of January should the EC fail to act by then.//
25X1	//The Commission proposal does, in fact, call on
•	the Nine to declare a 200-mile (322-kilometer) zone in January.
i	Efforts will undoubtedly be made to convince Britain and Ireland that establishing such a zone hinges on an agreement for a new
•	EC fishing policy that includes the 12-mile (19-kilometer) limit on each country's exclusive fishing zone.

	ITALY: Industrial Reorganization
25X1	Italy's major labor leaders and leftist political parties reacted critically this week to the Andreotti government's initial proposals in the key area of industrial reorganization and development. A coming parliamentary debate on the issue could provide a major test of the Communist Party's ability to influence the government's program.
25X1	Andreotti is proposing that the government provide guidance and funds to streamline and develop industry, reallocate workers more effectively, promote export trade, and modernize agriculture. According to press speculation, about $7 billion would be spent in the first four years; the entire program would require approximately $20 billion. A substantial portion of the funds would come from price increases on various public services and government-controlled commodities.
25X1	The government reportedly is inclined to deal with industry-related problems on a case-by-case basis, but labor leadersencouraged mainly by the Communistsare insisting that the program be administered in accordance with a comprehensive plan geared to specific regional and sectoral targets. The Communistswho characterize the proposed fund as an opportunity to "relaunch economic planning" in Italymaintain that priority should be given to labor-intensive investments, development of the backward south, and projects that will improve social services.
25X1	Andreotti noted this week that his program is still in draft form and subject to modification by Parliament. This theme was reinforced yesterday when budget officials announced they would be presenting only a "series of alternatives" to Parliament rather than a precise plan for industrial recovery.
25X1	If Andreotti leaves important details on this controversial issue to Parliament, many Christian Democrats will be disturbed because it will enhance the Communists' opportunities to claim credit for major legislation and to bolster their case for eventual inclusion in the government.
25X1

ITALY: Measures to Save Lira 25X1 Italian Premier Andreotti, following an emergency cabinet meeting last night, announced stiff measures to brake the recent plunge of the lira and shore up business confidence. The lira hit 873 to the dollar yesterday, the lowest rate in five months. The new actions include: -- Raising the discount rate 3 points to 15 percent, the highest level in history. --Placing a 10-percent tax on foreign exchange transactions for two weeks. --Increasing from 30 to 50 percent the amount of foreign currency equivalent required for exports. -- Increasing prices on petroleum products immediately. 25X1 25X1 These measures will shore up the lira temporarily. More fundamental measures will require parliamentary approval, which, in some cases, will be difficult to obtain. 25X1

ECUADOR: G	ulf Confiscation Averted
	Hours before the government-imposed deadline of Octomillion in	ador announced that Gulf Oil had paid more than $50 overdue foreign exchange deposits required on export rting confiscation of Gulf's share of Ecuadorean oil assets.
	//The payment opens the way to negotiations r to purchase Gulf's 37.5-percent share of the con-
for Ecuado
for Ecuado

25X1

Top<sup>A</sup>SecretFor Release 2005/04/28 : CIA-RDP79T00975A029400010004-1

(Security Classification)